

GREEN BEAN COFFEE COSTA RICA AND GREEN BEAN COFFEE ESSENTIAL TO THE COUNTRY

Costa Rican coffee is recognized worldwide for its high quality and wide range of exotic flavors. For over 200 years, Costa Rica has perfected its coffee production and is recognized for its Arabica coffee, where 80% of national production is grown in eight different coffee regions, achieving the various organoleptic characteristics in the coffee beans.

Features

Different climates allow coffee beans of various varieties to be produced in our country, representing 1% of the total worldwide export of coffee. Exports during 2018 were USD $273 million. The United States continues being the main market (+45% USD), however, coffee exports have expanded horizons and consumption in Asia and Europe is increasing.

Green-beans coffee continues to be one of the star products of Costa Rica, incorporating productive practices with significant social and environmental impacts. In the last five years, production has specialized in order to develop a large number of micro-lots and micro-benefits (processing plants) for a wider range of coffee production processes. The main varieties grown in the country are caturra and catuai, which represent more than 90% of the total coffee crops.

Costa Rican legislation establishes fair relations in the coffee sector and provides the legal framework for the traceability of all national production.

The coffee sector opted for a Nationally Appropriate Mitigation Action (NAMA), which is an international policy that provides financial support to developing countries and emerging economies that fight against climate change.
